MOOT COURT COMPETITION PROBLEM

This year's problem presents an interesting question yet to be addressed by the U.S. Supreme Court and involves constitutional issues and the unique political status of Puerto Rico, a U.S. territory.

Defendant Enrique Guerra-Pujol stands accused for the commission of crimes punishable by death. Specifically, Defendant was charged on Feb. 21, 2014 with violating, inter alia, 18 U.S.C. § 924(j) (firearm murder in relation to a crime of violence) and 18 U.S.C. § 1513(a)(1)(B) (killing a person in retaliation for providing law enforcement officials with information relating to the possible commission of a federal offense), offenses which are both punishable by death under the Federal Death Penalty Act of 1994, as amended, 18 U.S.C. § 3591 et seq.

Defendant has moved to declare the federal death penalty inapplicable in Puerto Rico and makes three arguments in challenging the applicability of the federal death penalty in Puerto Rico:

- (1) Because Article II, § 7 of the Constitution of Puerto Rico expressly prohibits capital punishment, the federal death penalty is "locally inapplicable" within the meaning of section 9 of the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act, 48 U.S.C. § 734;
- (2) Applying the federal death penalty to U.S. citizens residing in Puerto Rico, without their consent, and in view of their utter lack of representation in the enactment of Federal law, violates Defendant's fundamental right to Substantive Due Process under the US Constitution; and
- (3) Applying the federal death penalty to U.S. citizens residing in Puerto Rico, without their consent, and in view of their utter lack of representation in the enactment of Federal law, also violates the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), an international treaty duly ratified by the United States on June 8, 1992.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

- (1) Is the Federal Death Penalty Act of 1994 "locally inapplicable" within the meaning of section 9 of the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act?
- (2) Does application of the federal death penalty in Puerto Rico violate Defendant's right to substantive due process, especially given the fact U.S. citizens residing in Puerto Rico lack equal voting representation in Congress?
- (3) Does Defendant have standing to invoke the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights?
